A SPEECH concerning the PRUSSIAN TREATY delivered in a GRAND POLITICAL ACADEMY by Mr. PITT.

THE Treaty now in Question is, you know, a Treaty for the most effectual Means to secure the Interests of England, and the Liberties of Europe, as any that ever was brought into any Assembly.

Gentlemen, when one Side of the Question, have said a great deal against what they call Continental Connections, and others have supported them with equal Warmth. For my own Part, Sir, give me Leave to say, that I partly differ, and partly agree, with both; and, let me lay further, that the Treaty before us seems to have hit the very Point in which the true Interest of Great-Britain does lay; a Point which, Sir, it ever must lie while we are a Free, Great, a Free, and an independent People.

Could I conceive a continental Measure, Sir, so circumstanced as to be totally unconnected with our Interest, I am very sure my honourable Friend over the way could not oppose it with more Zeal, nay perhaps he might oppose it with more Ability, with more Efficacy, than I would. But, Sir, I am afraid I may not have the last Notion of the Interest of Great-Britain, that some Gentlemen have.

In my Opinion, Sir, the Interest of England, in whatever Light we view it, comprehends the whole System of public Liberty in Europe. Whenever that, Sir, is affected, whenever that is shocked, give me Leave to say, and I appeal to all Europe for the Truth of what I advance, our Interest of England is endangered. This, Sir, is a Maxim that has ever been laid down and invariably pursued by all the wife and public-spirited Princes and Ministers we have ever had, and I hope it never will be given up under this Ministry.

The Increase or Diminution of our Exports and Imports, the Articles upon our Custom-House Books, and the several Matters contained in the Papers that now lie before us, are all of them Points of the highest Consequence to the Interest, I may say to the Existence of this Kingdom. For Gentlemen to confine all their Views, all their Cares, all their Reasonings, to that Point, as to the clearing the Dial-Plate, and adjusting the Movements of a Watch, without considering that the main Spring is ready to leap asunder, is True Enthusiasm, for the public Liberty of Europe, which can be affected only by the Preservation of the Present Ballance, give me Leave to say, Sir, is the main Spring of the Interests of Great-Britain. The Ministry, Sir, will hold fast our Acquisitions, and by the Blessing of God, will endeavour, that Measures may give the Ambition of France Leisure to look homewards, I shall be for going to work, as upon that Occasion, we have considered as our greatest Misfortune, a dreadful Prospect, Sir, when we consider what has happened during the Course of a late and previous War.

I am as far as any Gentleman in this House can be from justifying all the continental Connections we have run into for these 30 Years past. But, will any Man lay his Hand upon his Heart, and say, that if Great-Britain, during that Time, had been an unconcerned Spectator of the Troubles of Europe, that Power would not, in that Time, have been more than in a Condition to carry dispute with her the Empire of the Seas, even with all the Ruin which the late War, however successful, has brought upon her? Trade has followed Conquest, and Conquest has followed Trade, till the Commerce of France and her Colonies has become the Object of our Arms. Have we not the Money that has been remitted to the Continent, you'll say, almost ever since the Accession of his present Majesty, that was for making an Easy Liberty that was for? Have we not the Troops that were for? Have we not the Conquests that were for? Have we not the Glory that was for? Have we not the Peace that was for? Have we not the Ballance of Power that was for? Have we not the Liberties of Europe that were for? Have we not the Interest of Great-Britain
